Exposed: residents' tower block terror

Councillor lifts lid on drug dealing, harassment and violence

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoffb@londonweeklynews.co.uk

A FOUR-YEAR reign of terror endured by residents of North Kensington – who are daily threatened and frightened by gun-toting drug dealers – has been exposed by a leading member of the council.

Councillor Pat Mason has broken the silence which has long surrounded an era of misery and intimidation suffered by parents and children living amid "drug dens, violence, guns and harassment" at the 13-storey Hazlewood Tower off Golborne Road.

Cllr Mason is blowing the whistle in what he says is a shocking indictment of Kensington and Chelsea Council's Tenant Management Organisation (TMO), the police and the courts, who he says have all failed to protect residents at the 74 flats from bullying dealers – who threatened to cut the throat of an elderly tenant of the "terror tower" if he spoke out against them.

"For four years and counting, residents and families at Hazlewood Tower have suffered the activities of two drug dens.

"This includes people visiting the Tower to buy drugs, addicts smoking cannabis and shooting up heroin on the stairways, and the harassment and threats of violence against any resident who complains to the TMO or calls the police," said Cllr Mason, who represents the Golborne ward.

"One resident bravely stood up against those running the drug dens and has supported court cases against them brought by the TMO and himself – only for the dealers to respond with violent assaults against him.

"Incredibly, one of the dealers he helped bring to court threatened him inside the court. Like other residents, he has suffered years of extreme anti-social behaviour, all-night noisy drug-fuelled parties, sleeplessness and severe stress from drug dens on the Tower landings.

"The police, TMO and the Courts have failed to protect residents at Hazlewood Tower.

"Although the RBKC, police and the Met's Trident team say there is no connection between the year-long gang war that has been raging across North Kensington and three adjoining boroughs, and the drug den activity at Hazlewood Tower, residents find it difficult to make that distinction when a firearm was recently discharged outside the Tower entry door and a shotgun was fired outside the nearby Holmefield House."

Despite putting himself at risk of serious injury or worse at the hands of the drugs thugs, Cllr Mason, who is also Chair of the RBKC Crime and Disorder Committee, has tackled them face to face.

"I visited Hazlewood Tower twice recently and saw drug-dealing and people trying to gain access to buy drugs from one of the dealers. On that occasion I chased them out, then phoned the

Dirty air link to violence

SCIENTISTS have offered a shocking new explanation for the surge in violence in Kensington and Chelsea – dirty air.

Following recent research which revealed that pollution increases the risk of dementia, now another study suggests that London's toxic air may also be the link to the rise in violent attacks.

The US findings tie in with official statistics for London, where last week City Hall issued a toxic air red alert in eight boroughs including Kensington and Chelsea. As the city's air quality has worsened in recent years, burglary rates have not increased but incidents of violent attacks have soared as people become more aggressive.

Now calls have gone out to Mayor of London Sadiq Khan to launch City Hall's own research to discover if the capital's increasingly-deteriorating air quality is linked to the rise in violence.

IT literacy project 'a holistic answer to lots of problems'

 Jaya Lalwani, right, with Citizens Advice colleagues and TechTalk volunteers

WE are living in a digital age where our friends and family are at our fingertips 24 hours a day, seven days a week. We only need to tap a few buttons to pull up the latest headlines, check the football scores, watch a film or listen to music.

But there are thousands of Londoners who remain disconnected from the technological revolution.

While servers, spreadsheets and hashtags are now second nature to most of us, many still find themselves frozen out of the digital world.

"The predominant barrier to entry with digital inclusion is fear, this idea of being too old to learn," says Jaya Lalwani, who heads up TechTalk, a unique project run by Citizens Advice Hammersmith and Fulham specially designed to get people connected.

"They think 'Why do I need to learn how to use a computer when there are so many young people out there who could just help me?'"

"If you have a situation from which you can't extract yourself and it's a recurring problem you can solve yourself, you shouldn't have to ask for help for that."

TechTalk has only been up and running at Avonmore Library since March 2015 but it has already helped around 500 people to get online.

The service is primarily there to help jobseekers and the elderly, who for various reasons have never learned how to use a computer.

But it is available to anyone, of any age, living in Hammersmith and Fulham.

Run entirely by volunteers, the project is based on personalised support starting with a one-to-one interview.

Citizens Advice "digital champions" then guide people on a tailored programme of training to bring their computer skills up to speed.

"Some of our clients don't have email, they don't have an (email) address, they don't know how it works – they don't even know where to start," says Jaya.

"It's kind of a holistic answer to lots of problems, a one-stop-shop solution for them to come in and get some digital support."

"It makes people very comfortable to know that they just have to come to one venue to find multiples solutions to multiple problems."

Most people don't want to admit that they can't do something, explains Jaya. But when they are asked the question and offered the right support, they are extremely determined.

"They want to know that they are going to be supported, that they are not going to be left on their own in front of a computer and three clicks later they are not going to know what to do."

"It's the idea that someone is there that is helpful, that is familiar to them, that makes them happy to come and ask you because they have seen you talk to others."

Avonmore is the only library in the country run entirely by Citizens Advice.

Jaya says the multi-faceted set-up enables the library to function more as a community centre – and the unique prototype is now being used as a role model for other Citizens Advice centres across the UK.

People may check in just for digital support but end up staying to take part in one of the many other bespoke sessions and events at the library.

"It's the dedication of our volunteers coming in and being motivated to help," says Jaya.

"Quite a few of our digital champions are clients who actually came in originally with a problem of their own."

"It's that circle of people coming through the door and saying 'We really like what you do here'."

"It helps with their confidence, with their CV development, their ability to stand up and speak or lead a group session. We're so proud of that."

'Go wild' call to scarecrow fans

THE Royal Horticultural Society is calling for pre-schools and primary schools from Kensington and Chelsea to take "a walk on the wild side" and design wildlife-themed scarecrows for display at the RHS Hampton Court Palace Flower Show in July.

The shortlisted schools will be asked to build their scarecrow designs which will be judged by visitors at the show. To enter, pupils must be in year six or below and must be registered with the RHS Campaign for School Gardening.

The winners will receive £200 worth of gardening vouchers, with second and third placed schools receiving £150 and £50 worth of gardening vouchers. The deadline for entries is 10 March 2017.

"The schools are challenged to use plants and recycled materials to create their 'walk on the wild side' inspired scarecrows," said a RHS spokesman.

"Children can let their imaginations run wild, taking inspiration from people, places and animals across the UK. The wildlife theme will run across this year's RHS Hampton Court Palace Flower Show, raising awareness of the urgent need to support Britain's declining wildlife."

To enter and to sign up to the RHS Campaign for School Gardening, schools should visit the website: <https://schoolgardening.rhs.org.uk/Competitions/Hampton-Court-Scarecrows>

Gemma Lake, Deputy Show Manager for RHS Hampton Court Palace Flower Show, said: "The scarecrow competition is an incredibly popular feature at the show and I'm really looking forward to seeing the imaginative ideas the children come up with this year. I love seeing the excitement on the children's faces when they attend the show on Press Day and see their hard work on display."

Railway death 'not suspicious'

A MAN died after he was hit by a train at Ravenscourt Park station.

Officers from the British Transport Police found the man's body on the tracks on the evening of Sunday January 15.

A spokesman said the death was not being treated as suspicious and that a file would be prepared for the coroner.

There were severe delays on the Piccadilly Line between 7pm and around 9pm and the service was temporarily closed between Green Park and Acton Town.

Taskforce to protect parks

TOWN-HALL chiefs have set up a new taskforce to safeguard Hammersmith and Fulham's parks and green spaces.

The Parks Commission, which will comprise residents and members of community groups as well as councillors, held its first meeting last week.

Protecting parks from the threat of new developments is expected to be a major aspect of the commission's brief.

Council urged to fund project to overcome child mutilation

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

KENSINGTON and Chelsea Council will be pressed this week to provide £150,000 a year to save thousands of children at risk of outlawed and barbaric mutilation which is practised in secret in the royal borough.

The Labour Group of councillors are calling for the cash to fund projects aimed at preventing female genital mutilation, a savage cultural ritual which is inflicted on girls aged from a few days old to their teens.

FGM is illegal in the UK and those carrying it out or helping it to take place, who are usually women, can face up to 14 years in prison.

But official medical research estimates that 1,644 women in Kensington and Chelsea have suffered the butchery, which is most common among families from Africa, Asia and the Middle East.

The practice, which attempts to control women's sexuality, is also rife in neighbouring boroughs.

In Hammersmith and Fulham, an estimated 2,983 women have undergone FGM, representing 31.9 cases per 1,000 population. This constitutes the fifth highest level of estimated prevalence of any local authority in England and Wales. Estimates for Westminster suggest that 2,619 women in the area have undergone FGM, representing 24.3 cases per 1,000 population.

The total number of maternities in the Tri-Borough from 2005 to 2013 to women who had undergone FGM is estimated to have been 7,210.

But thousands more are now at risk and the Labour Group is urging the Conservative-led Council to pick up funding for prevention as initial Department of Education cash for the campaign against FGM is running out.

The Labour councillors have submitted a motion to the next Full Council meeting of Kensington and Chelsea Council on Wednesday (25th January) calling on the Cabinet to commit to permanently funding the Female Genital Mutilation Early Intervention project whose continued existence is threatened.

The innovative project brought together midwives, specialist social workers, therapists and health advocates from the communities affected to identify families where children are most at risk from FGM.

The aims were to prevent the practice taking place, and to support women who have undergone FGM in the past. "It is a particularly important issue in RBKC and the Tri-Borough area due to the ethnic make-up of the Inner London boroughs," said Councillor Harrison Littler, the Group's spokesman for Family and Children's Services, who is proposing the cash plea.

"It is estimated that 12,850 residents of the three Boroughs originate from countries where FGM is traditionally practised."

Cllr Littler added: "Preventing FGM forms a major part of the safeguarding duties we have towards children in London."

"The practice has such a devastating impact on girls that the only acceptable type of intervention is to prevent it happening in the first place - that's why this project, with its focus on early intervention and building trust and good will over time in affected communities is vital."

"Every case of FGM we prevent through this work is a priceless and life-changing victory for a child we have a responsibility to protect. The original funding is running out, and I believe we have a moral obligation to ensure this outstanding work can continue."

Cllr Judith Blakeman, who is seconding the motion, said: "We've been campaigning for action on this issue since the 1990s. It has taken so long to get these services in place that it would be disastrous to lose them now."

The full text of the motion Reads: "This Council commends the work of the FGM Innovation Project which has brought together midwives, specialist social workers and community activists to identify girls at risk of FGM and work with communities and families to prevent the practice across the Tri-Borough area."

"Further, this Council congratulates those involved for their successes and particularly on being shortlisted for an award from the Royal College of Midwives."

"This Council recognises that the initial funding for the project has come to an end and that further funding is being secured on an ad hoc basis, at levels which have already required some elements of the project to be cut."

"This Council therefore asks the Cabinet to commit to securing the future of this vital safeguarding work by bringing the funding of it into existing budget frameworks, with the co-operation of neighbouring Boroughs where appropriate."

Call for action at 'tower of terror'

police to ask why they were not patrolling here when they know what residents have to suffer.

"The TMO are trying to evict one of the worst offenders but are moving too slowly, and residents who kick up think they view them as a problem because they have complained for four years."

"Unless residents are prepared to give evidence to the TMO and the police, the dealers will win. But there are many tenants who have been harassed by the dealers and their customers and are terrified of speaking up."

Cllr Mason has gone public through this newspaper in the hope that the Council, the TMO and the police will now take urgent action to turf out the drug dealers who are ruining the lives of residents.

"I have asked the police to come down hard on drug dens, busting them every week until they stop dealing and making residents lives a misery, or leave Golborne," he said.

"I have also asked them to patrol the stairways at Hazlewood Tower where there is regular drug-taking and open dealing of the kind I witnessed."

"Hazlewood Tower is full of families with children, elderly residents and people with disabilities who should not have to run the gauntlet and the threats of criminals who should be evicted or sent to prison if the courts would do their job properly."

"But few of these Judges have any idea what it's like to have your life ruined by violent people running drug dens so they let the tenants suffer."

Councillor Pat Mason has broken the silence which has long surrounded an era of hideous misery and intimidation suffered by parents and children living amid 'drug dens, violence, guns and harassment' at 13-storey Hazlewood Tower

"The police always promise to patrol, they know the times when most criminal activity happens, they have door fobs to allow them entry to the Tower, but no one sees them, and they weren't there when I chased the dealers out of the building last Tuesday at about 4pm."

"I'd like the police to do regular busts but they have resource problems and can only respond depending on how many calls they receive from other locations."

"So all the officers are over at Harrods to move speeding luxury cars because the well-heeled over there are calling the police while the people at Hazlewood are afraid to call because they get threatened if the dealers find out - so the police don't attend."

One resident of the Tower, who we are not naming for his protection, told this newspaper: "This hideous situation has now spiralled completely out of control because the TMO are not taking action."

"We pay £6.50 a week as part of our rent for a concierge service which is basically to pay for CCTV cameras here."

"The authorities see the footage, they see this all going on a daily basis, but they just don't act on it."

"The drug-dealing, threats and violence here is now at an unprecedented level."

"It's a terror tower, these hoods threatened to cut the throat of an elderly neighbour of mine if he complained, people are living in terror and something urgently needs to be done."

Artists are urged to get in frame for Portobello project

KENSINGTON and Chelsea council is calling for local artists to submit proposals for this year's Portobello Road Arts Project.

The theme for the commission for the 100m wall is Moving Image, Film and North Kensington.

A council spokesman said: "The wall has been chosen as the site for artwork as it falls in between two of the most vibrant and well-known market areas in London – Portobello Road Market and Golborne Road Market.

"However, the wall is an effective 'dead space', marking for many visitors the end of their journey along Portobello Road.

"The project aims to help regenerate the Golborne area through creating a visual link between Portobello Road Market and Golborne Road Market. The project hopes through this to encourage visitors to continue their journeys further up Portobello Road to discover the vibrant Golborne area."

The wall has previously featured work by Peter Dunn, Nadia Hammond and Fiona Hawthorne.

Locally based artist Hawthorne captured a particular aspect of the distinctive life and the vibrancy of North Kensington and celebrated the legacy of Notting Hill Carnival with her wall Aspects Of Carnival.

The multimedia artwork was a celebration of life in the Portobello area

Artists are asked to submit proposals for this year's Portobello Road Wall Arts Project through 14 striking panels, portraying the people who live there, capturing diversity and with a focus on carnival.

Aspects Of Carnival was the seventh in the series of 10 original art installations which have featured on the Portobello Road North Wall since the project began in 2009.

Now the council is seeking new art for the wall. Submissions should be sent to the council by noon on Friday February 10.

"Submissions will be judged on their ability to be striking, impactful and reflect the local area so that they capture the attention and engage pedestrians," said the spokesman.

The successful work is planned to be installed during June and will remain in place for 12 months.

NEWS FROM NICK

Leader of Kensington and Chelsea council, Nick Paget-Brown, comments on the plans for alterations to high-end retail destination and thriving residential area

Let's make Sloane Square even better

SLOANE Street has an international reputation as a high-end retail destination. It's also a thriving residential area. It's a fabulous street boasting some fine architecture and it also has the wonderful Cadogan Place Gardens which are much loved by residents and the many visitors attracted to the area each day.

Despite this praise of Sloane Street's virtues, the council thinks the street has drawbacks and could, with some alterations, be improved. It competes with some of the finest shopping streets in Europe and needs to present an attractive face to both shoppers and residents. This could be done by reducing the dominance of traffic and improving what some refer to as the public realm but many people might recognise as the pavements and street furniture.

We're not alone in believing things could be better still – The Cadogan Estate, the biggest local landlord, has a long-term interest in the success of the area. With its funding there is an unparalleled opportunity to make some changes.

We've just distributed a document to the local community designed to consult on options for improving Sloane Street. We know from previous communications that many local people saw benefits in improving the streetscape with better paving, lighting and more greenery. However, we picked up concerns about the impact any change might have on traffic, public transport and parking. Having listened to these concerns the highway designers have developed some initial concepts into a design that we believe will make the road more attractive while keeping its character intact and, very importantly, avoiding any negative effect on traffic flows.

In essence we want to rejig the space to make more room for pedestrians on wider pavements. We want to add more greenery with high-quality planting and we also want to reduce traffic speeds and introduce sustainable drainage measures.

There are a number of public exhibitions planned where local people can find out more about the project and see a model of what the street might look like if everything goes ahead. There will be staff on hand to answer questions.

The exhibition will be held at 129 Sloane Street, SW1X 9AT, and will be staffed and open to the public on:

● Thursday January 26 from 2pm to 8pm;

● Friday January 27 from 10am to 2pm;

● Saturday January 28 from 10am to 2pm;

● Saturday February 4 from 10am to 2pm.

I'd encourage as many people as possible to pop in and find out more. It's really important to let us have your views and if you have received the consultation document please complete it and return it to us. Closing date is Monday February 27. You can find out lots more by going to sloanestreet@rbkc.gov.uk.

New action group insists: fight to stop Heathrow expansion goes on

jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

FURIOUS campaigners in Hammersmith and Fulham have vowed to lead the fight against Heathrow expansion as protestors prepare to challenge ministers over their decision to give the go-ahead to a controversial third runway.

A new pressure group, called h&fnthirdrunway, will meet for the first time next week in a bid to rally support against the plan.

The Government announced in the autumn that it was backing the creation of an extra runway at the UK's largest airport, despite major concerns over noise pollution.

New flight paths created by the additional runway are likely to pass directly over Hammersmith and Shepherd's Bush – a prospect which has angered many residents.

Campaigners are now beginning a new chapter in their bid to block the runway and are appealing for members of the public to show their support.

Christina Smyth, who headed Hammersmith and Fulham council's airports commission in 2015, founded the new group with fellow campaigner Victoria Timberlake last year.

She said: "The campaign against a third runway continues and we really want to get as much local support as possible."

John Stewart, the chairman of the airports campaign organisation Hacan, will speak at the group's first meeting in Hammersmith on Monday (January 30).

And organisers hope dozens of residents who fear the impact of a third runway on their day-to-day lives will turn up to voice their concerns.

"We are really lucky to have John Stewart as our guest speaker," Ms Smyth added. "He has expert knowledge after campaigning for many years to protect the rights of residents living under Heathrow's flight paths."

"Anyone is welcome to come along,

Protestors from Hammersmith and Fulham campaigning against Heathrow expansion in the Prime Minister's Maidenhead constituency last year whether they are members or not. It is time to get involved."

A number of environmental organisations, pressure groups and local councils have threatened legal action in the wake of the Government's commitment to Heathrow expansion in October.

It came after the Howard Davies Commission recommended the option to ministers in 2015.

Hammersmith and Fulham's own airports commission concluded two years ago that Heathrow expansion would have a severe detrimental impact on quality of life for people living in the borough.

The first meeting of h&fnthirdrunway will take place at Holy Innocents Church in Paddenswick Road, Hammersmith, on Monday, January 30 at 7.30pm.

Garage sites fit for new

MORE than 16,000 new homes could be built across London on land occupied by unused or rundown garages owned by councils, according to new research.

A study of local authority-owned lock-ups in the capital revealed 24 councils own a total of 53,640 – with 41 per cent empty or in disrepair.

Demolishing them and replacing them with affordable one-bedroom flats could go some way to solving the London housing crisis where the average home now costs £475,000.

The figures were revealed in a Freedom of Information request by property crowdfunding platform Property Partner.

Researchers worked out that the 22,000 empty council-owned garages in London covered a total of eight million square feet.

If they were replaced with developments made up of 500 sq/ft flats, it is estimated 16,000 affordable homes could be built.

The London Assembly says between 49,000 and 80,000 new homes are needed each year to cope with the projected population growth of a million in the next ten years.

Dan Gandesha, CEO of Property Partner, said: "This is just a snapshot of publicly owned land in London which is clearly surplus to requirement, underused or undeveloped."

"When we have a crisis in affordable housing not just in the capital but in the UK, it begs the question whether councils in Britain should either sell off the land for development or build new homes themselves."

"If a significant number of council garages, which are part of housing estates, are not even rented to those who should have a right to them – local authority tenants – then it could be argued that this is a wasted opportunity."

The worst offending boroughs are Ealing, Havering, Brent and Enfield, which have respectively 74 per cent (1,480 empty garages), 72 per cent (1,469), 71 per cent (1,234) and 70 per cent (2,008) lying idle.

The most expensive garage was in Chelsea, which sold for £670,000 in what is believed to be a record for a garage in the capital.

Teenager dies after assault

A TEENAGER was killed just yards from Wembley Stadium in the early hours of Friday morning.

The victim, believed to be 19, is thought to be the first teenager murdered in London in 2017.

He was found collapsed near a block of flats in Wembley, north London, just a few streets away from the national football stadium.

He was treated at the scene, near a Novotel Hotel, by paramedics at 1.15am but he was pronounced dead at the scene.

Scotland Yard said he had been assaulted but further inquiries were under way to establish exactly how he died.

A man in his 20s was arrested on suspicion of murder and was being questioned by police.

The scene was cordoned off by officers as investigations continued on Friday.

A Scotland Yard spokesman said: "Police in Brent were called to Fulton Road at 01:13hrs on Friday, January 20 following reports a man had been assaulted. Officers and London Ambulance Service attended and found a man in his late teens suffering from assault-related injuries."

"He died at the scene a short while later."

Oops, has anyone mislaid their OBE?

HAS anybody gonged in the recent New Year's Honours thrown their medal away already?

If so, contact London binmen who found an OBE medal in the rubbish.

The waste clearance company EnviroWaste found the medal during a routine waste haul and is appealing to the public for any information that could help reunite the medal with its owner.

The medal is in a black leather presentation box, with OBE printed in gold print on the lid, and also contains some of the paperwork to go with it including a "when to wear" guide.

The company has already tried to find the owner on its own, and is now appealing to the public for any information on anyone they know in the London area who has lost or misplaced an OBE.

'Rudest landlord', 90, thaws thanks to surprise party

BY GEOFF BAKER

geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

"LONDON'S rudest landlord", Soho legend Norman Balon, famed for shocking customers at the Coach and Horses, was shocked himself for once when his old regulars sprang a 90th birthday surprise on his return to the Greek Street pub.

Mr Balon, notorious for his abuse to customers at the bar that he ran for 63 years before his retirement in 2006, thought he was just popping in for a pint at his old pub – but he found the Coach packed with pals going back to the days when his regulars included the Private Eye team, artists Francis Bacon, Lucien Freud and Damien Hirst and actors John Hurt and Peter O'Toole.

At first he gave a typically grumpy response to the crowd of 120 who had been invited in secret by landlord Alastair Choat.

"When Norman first walked in and saw everybody he turned to his wife Grazia and said 'F-it, someone's having a private party, let's go somewhere else'," said Mr Choat.

"She said 'No, they're all here for you!' – to which Norman characteristically responded 'F-off! They're all f-ing mad!'"

But when the penny dropped the once-famously miserable Mr Balon thawed.

"As soon as Norman realised the good, the bad and the ugly of Soho were there to pay their respects and celebrate with him, he was back in his stride as if he had never left," said Mr Choat.

"But on this occasion Norman was very happy and this was evident in the smiles and laughter ringing around the pub.

"Struan Rogers, the actor and Norman's great friend and chess partner, really summed the occasion up and left not a dry eye in the house when he said 'These people would not have turned up here today if you were not held in such high regard. And on behalf of everyone here, thank you very much not for what you were but for what you are.'"

Following the speeches, including from Mr Balon's daughter Natasha, the acclaimed cartoonist Michael Heath presented Mr Balon with the latest cartoon addition to the pub's collection, Norman's 90th birthday card.

"Michael proclaimed Norman to be his father figure in his very moving speech. By the end even Norman had a tear in his eye. But that did not put him off his traditional style," said Mr Choat.

"In his acceptance speech he said 'I hated the customers, they were a bloody nuisance, every one of them. But I am very touched about all of this. It's been a fantastic day, a complete surprise and don't forget to pay your bill before you go'."

ADVERTISER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Why should I go to a public event about health and social care?

The NHS and your local council are holding a joint public event for residents of Kensington and Chelsea, and Queen's Park and Paddington. Here's why you should go...

HEALTH and social care in your local area is changing. NHS West London Clinical Commissioning Group (CCG) and the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea are holding a joint event called Your Health, Your Care to tell you about plans to bring health and social care closer together – and give you the opportunity to ask questions about these plans.

The doors will open at 6pm for you to browse open stalls offering health and social care advice, and locally tailored information on how to choose the right NHS service for a particular need.

From 6.30pm, there will be a series of short talks from health and social care staff. These talks will be followed by a lively Q&A session, where residents, patients and carers can ask questions in a public setting – and really listen to the answers.

Dr Fiona Butler, chair of NHS West London CCG, said: "We are really looking forward to Your Health,

Your Care on 31 January. It will be a great opportunity for us to hear from patients, carers and the public, and an opportunity for them to get some detail from us about how we will improve services in the CCG area."

NHS West London CCG has already set out its priorities for joining up health and social care in the Sustainability and Transformation Plan (STP), which was drawn up between eight CCGs and a number of local councils.

This shared North West London STP been submitted to NHS England for approval, and it has been published in its current form on the CCG website.

The plan is a blueprint for essentially doing five things: driving an overall improvement to the health and wellbeing of our population; making sure the hospital services you use most are safe, sustainable, and smartly run; helping people over 65 stay fit and independent; tackling the roots of mental-health problems in our community by guaranteeing strong preventive care in the early stages of illness; and giving patients with long-term illnesses such as asthma or diabetes, and their carers, reliable health education from our clinical experts to help them live successful, dynamic lives.

Attendees at the event will have the opportunity to ask questions about the reasons for these plans, how the plans will work in practice, and what benefits can be expected as a result.

Councillor Mary Weale, the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea's cabinet member for adult social care and public health, said: "This is a chance for users of these services to put questions to those who plan and deliver them."

Booking is recommended as seating is limited.

Time to share memories of life at prep school

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

FORMER Kensington Prep girls are being invited to share their memories of school life to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the institution's move to Fulham.

Kensington Prep is compiling a school memories book with anecdotes, photos and memorabilia to celebrate the anniversary of the school's move in 1997.

"The school would love to hear memories of former pupils about their childhood at Kensington Prep," said a spokesman.

Former pupils are asked to email

Now and then – the photograph above, of a current classroom at the school, shows how times have changed since the era shown in the picture left their memories to alumnae@kenprep.gdst.net or write to Memories, Kensington Prep School, 596 Fulham Road, London, SW6 5PA.

Kensington Prep School traces its history to Chelsea High School, the first school founded by the Girls' Public Day School Company, now the Girls' Day School Trust.

It opened in January 1873 at Smith Street in Chelsea with 20 girls under headmistress Miss Porter.

In 1879 it moved to Cromwell Road in Kensington and was renamed Kensington High School.

In 1888 Kensington High moved once more, to Lytham House in Kensington – but it was destroyed by a bomb in 1941. The school was relocated to Phillimore Gardens as a temporary measure for the duration of the Second World War while the management searched for a better location.

In the end, the senior school was closed several years after the war ended. The junior school remained open and became Kensington Prep.

The award-winning Kensington Prep is now an independent day school in Fulham for girls aged four to 11.

The school is set in more than an acre of grounds with netball and tennis courts and a pond for environmental studies and has some of the best facilities of any prep school in London. The school is non-denominational. There are 290 girls in classes of about 20 girls.

The school offers traditional values combined with innovative teaching and is at the forefront of IT.

It has been awarded the prestigious ICT mark for the second time and there are iPad tablets and laptops in the classroom. There is also an IT suite. The school has also just introduced a new digital learning platform and parent portal.

There is a now a large library at the heart of the school, a state-of-the-art science lab and dedicated specialist rooms for art, design technology, music and drama.

Winter concert is 'best yet'

THE annual winter concert at DLD College London proved "the best yet", with 20 students rewarded for their outstanding achievements and a spectacular display of talent showcased.

Parents, teachers, staff and students gathered in the atrium of the Westminster Bridge-based college to enjoy the show and to applaud the students for their hard work and dedication.

MC Michael Brett welcomed guests and introduced the prize winners. An abundance of musicians took to the stage. From pianists and singers to bands and the ukulele group, the atrium was filled with music and superb poetry and prose readings.

This academic year, the college also raised money for Crisis at Christmas which helps people who are sleeping rough. A presentation was held by the student council to demonstrate the importance of helping those less fortunate and who may not have somewhere to live or eat.

A student who showcased her excellent musical talents was also presented with an award.

Dayanan Chumburidze, 16, gave a beautiful rendition of Warrior's Song by Stephen Heller on the piano and captivated the audience with her ability. The GCSE student then went on to collect her certificate for her regular attendance and contribution to concerts and events including judging the recent DLD's Got Talent show.

College principal Rachel Borland said: "The entertainment has been exceptional. Every year we say it couldn't get better and every year it does."

Do YOU have a fear or phobia?

Phobias are often due to the fear of a situation that occurred sometime in the past being linked to something that might happen in the future. The result is that the mind triggers a mechanism that makes the body overreact to that situation whenever it, or even the thought of it, recurs. A phobic trigger can affect a person's ability to do things that most other people see as no problem. Phobic triggers, or very stressful situations, can be a precursor to anxiety or panic attacks. A full on attack can bring on symptoms such as dizziness, fainting, lightheadedness, heart palpitations, fast breathing, tensing up, sweaty palms or feet, racing pulse, trembling, nausea or the urge to defecate.

Notting Hill Carnival's future 'in mayor's hands'

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

THE future of the Notting Hill Carnival is now solely in the hands of just one man – Sadiq Khan.

That is the clear message of the in-depth and exhaustive report on Europe's biggest street festival published by the London Assembly, which states that now the mayor of London should "get a grip" on the carnival which Kensington and Chelsea councillors, Westminster Council, the organising trust, the Met, the local MP and residents have all failed to control properly.

The Assembly's in-part damning report, Notting Hill Carnival – Safer And Better, reveals that the festival which attracts more than one million people has become far too big an event for it to remain any longer in the demonstrably incapable hands of local authorities and organisers.

The carnival, which for 50 years has been lauded as a community event, is now set to become a London event, with mayor Mr Khan at the helm of it.

While praising the great work and tireless efforts of Carnival Trust chairman Pepe Francis and his tiny team of organisers, the report makes it clear that a massive cash infusion – possibly up to £10 million – is now needed from the Mayor's Office in order to prevent the ostensibly joyous and celebratory event further descending into a dangerous and overcrowded orgy of disorder, drug-taking and violence which puts public safety at risk.

With more than 60 bands, 50,000 performers, 7,000 police officers, 2,000 stewards and the number of revellers equalling the population of Birmingham, the carnival, the report warns, "is now at tipping point".

Add to that the 396 crimes committed last year, the 90 arrests for possession of weapons, the 151 attacks on people, the more than 1,000 casualties treated and the stabbings which very nearly resulted in four deaths and it is easy to see why the London Assembly members warn that the carnival now "risks people's safety and its reputation".

The report by the Assembly's police and crime committee states that one option for Mr Khan to consider is to restructure the current free-for-all on the lines of London's New Year's Eve fireworks – with paid ticketing for the event and limiting the number of tickets.

"One of the most obvious risks for the carnival is overcrowding. This is made all the more acute because of the carnival's high attendance figures and its street-

The two faces of Notting Hill Carnival, which attracts more than one million people based location. Very few other events in London are comparable to the carnival in this respect," says the report.

"For too long we have repeated the debate about what might need to change about the carnival, with little action taken. It is becoming more and more apparent that the status quo is not an option. The mayor and the Mayor's Office for Policing and Crime are well placed to help carnival organisers get a grip on public safety at the carnival: there is proven success with enhancing public safety at events such as the New Year fireworks."

Limiting the numbers of people permitted to attend the carnival is an option that was floated to the Assembly committee by the Met – but this has been opposed as impractical by members of the Labour group of Kensington and Chelsea councillors, one of the many bodies involved in the carnival whose squabbling over the festival has now led to the intervention of London's lead authority, the GLA.

"Even if you could somehow cordon off the large carnival boundary, ticketing would be a step towards making the carnival a commercial event, for which the Carnival Trust would have to pay full policing costs, and there seems no prospect of that possibility for the foreseeable future," said the Labour group. "Since this would effectively be the end of the carnival as we know it today and very probably finally divorce it from its roots of the Afro-Caribbean community's reaction to the 1958 race riots, we believe this cannot be considered".

But funding from the Mayor's Office could cover the £7 million policing bill and, the crime committee urges, provide the money needed by organisers, the London Notting Hill Carnival Enterprises Trust, to hire of many more stewards who would be given greater powers.

"Unfortunately, the LNH CET suffers from a lack of support and capacity to deliver. It is run by volunteers, with little funding or staffing resource," the report states.

"It has come a long way and we congratulate its members who work so hard to make the carnival happen every year. It admits, however, that it still struggles and it is now time to provide it with a greater level of support.

"The mayor should now provide advice and guidance to the LNH CET to help put it on a more formal and financially sustainable footing. This will in turn improve its ability to deliver a safer and more secure carnival.

"LNHCET hopes that more stewarding will help the event become more self-sustainable... the role of the stewards may need to be further developed..."

The driving philosophy around stewarding at the carnival is to reduce the reliance on the police. We welcome any steps that will release officers from tasks that can be carried out equally well by others. This will help the Met to refocus efforts on tackling crime and disorder, something that is increasingly important given the recent rise in serious and violent crime."

And Steve O'Connell, chairman of the police committee, said: "We must not shut our ears to the concerns being raised. We need to improve the arrangements for safety and crime reduction at the carnival so that its success becomes the headline story, not its crime and disorder. The answer lies in giving those in charge of the carnival greater responsibility, ownership, capacity and capability to make the carnival a success and make sure it remains what it set out to be: a celebration of an exuberant culture.

"The London Notting Hill Carnival Enterprises Trust has come a long way but admits that it struggles. It cannot be right that the group organising one of London's most high-profile events is staffed by volunteers and is not receiving the support it needs."

Mr Khan is expected to report back with his proposals for the future of the carnival in May.

In the meantime, the last word from the report should be that of Mr Francis, chairman of the organisers, who told the police committee: "Yes, I am very concerned under my watch that something disastrous could happen in the carnival.

"Ladbroke Grove worries me when we come up there on an evening, especially if we get there after 7pm, which I tend to try to not do, trying to get there before to make sure that we are all safe.

"I am open to any change that will improve the health and safety of people.

"If change has to come, change has to come. However, change has to come with proper dialogue and very good discussion and planning."

Animal charity lobbies MPs over better protection for greyhounds

BATTERSEA Dogs & Cats Home has lobbied Parliament for better protection of greyhounds.

Representatives from the world-famous animal charity have met with MPs to discuss the needs of racing greyhounds and what needs to be done to better protect and safeguard their wellbeing.

At the meeting chaired by MP Angela Smith, a member of the environment, food and rural affairs select committee and the welfare member of the Greyhound Forum, Battersea chiefs pushed for changes in the law.

"In 2016 alone, Battersea took in 95 unwanted, ex-racing greyhounds. The conditions in which greyhounds are kept, and in which they arrive at Battersea, can vary wildly, and the home is involved with campaigning to promote and monitor standards for racing and post-racing greyhounds across Britain," said a spokesman.

Battersea's director of operations, Peter Laurie, said: "The current Welfare of Racing Greyhounds Regulations 2010 have delivered some important improvements. However, we believe there's much more to do.

"This is why we were so disappointed when the government's review last year did not propose additional requirements to address remaining areas of concern.

"We're asking for the 2010 regulations to be amended to make it mandatory for the industry to publish welfare data relating to injury, euthanasia and rehoming or retirement numbers.

"These regulations should also cover trainers' kennels, which aren't properly monitored, and yet are where greyhounds spend 95 per cent of their time.

"Battersea works closely with other greyhound welfare charities, and is an active member of the Greyhound Forum. As a result, we're pleased to take in many ex-racers, who are lovely dogs and make wonderful pets in the right environment. As with all our residents, we're committed to ensuring they go to the right homes with responsible new owners."

Current greyhounds at Battersea searching for their forever homes include Jason, an 18-month-old ex-racer. He is described as "friendly and affectionate with both humans and other dogs – he loves to curl up and snooze the day away".

The spokesman said: "There is also beautiful brown-and-white 18-month-old Blitz and his kennelmate, four-year-old Beauty, who can be rehomed separately or as a pair. Both affectionate and eager for a fuss, these two would enjoy home comforts for the first time."

Dirty air blamed for violent crime

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

SCIENTISTS have made a shock new explanation for the surge in violence across the city – the dirty air.

Following recent research which revealed that pollution increases the risk of dementia, now another study suggests that London's toxic air may also be the link to the rise in violent attacks.

US researchers studying how air pollution affects the brain say it could contribute to violent crime and now leading clean air campaigner Caroline Pidgeon says it is "vital" that the Mayor of London orders an urgent investigation into whether the capital's filthy air, already causing the deaths of up to 10,000 a year by worsening lung and heart conditions, is responsible for the rise in violence in the capital too.

According to research by Evan Herntstadt of Harvard University and Erich Muehlegger of the University of California, there's something in the air which could be making people turn nasty.

Comparing more than two million crimes reported to the Chicago Police Department over a 12-year period with pollution data, the researchers found no correlation between air quality and property crimes such as burglary and robbery.

However, violent crimes, including murder, rape and assault, rose 2.2 per cent in areas dealing with increased air pollution.

"This discrepancy across crime types may suggest that the primary mechanism is physiological; that is,

Caroline Pidgeon, a leading campaigner on air pollution, said there was a growing body of evidence which suggested a direct connection between dirty air and violence the pollution might make people more irritable and impulsive, thus leading to more violent crime," claim the researchers.

In their research paper Air Pollution And Criminal Activity the scientists say "This paper provides the first quasi-experimental evidence that air pollution causally affects criminal activity. Consistent with evidence from psychology on the relationship between pollution and aggression, the effect is unique to violent crimes – we find no effect of pollution on the commission of property crime."

Critics of the study have suggested that aggression could have been caused by lead in petrol as lead poisoning is associated with attention deficit disorder, impulsiveness, aggression and, according to one paper, psychopathic behaviour.

However, lead was banned in fuel in the US on January 1 1996, six years before the air pollution study began.

The US findings tie in with official statistics for London, where last week City Hall issued a toxic air red alert in eight boroughs, including Westminster, Kensington and Chelsea and Hammersmith and Fulham.

As the city's air quality has increasingly worsened in recent years, burglary rates have not increased but incidents of violent attacks have soared.

In Westminster and Kensington and Chelsea, named by Public Health England in December as London's two worst blackspots for air pollution, violence is on the increase whereas burglary is not.

Figures from the Met reveal that in the 12 months to November 2016, reports of some 7,769 violent attacks in Westminster rose by 11.5 per cent compared the previous year. But reports of residential burglary fell by three per cent. In heavily-polluted Kensington and Chelsea, incidents of violence rose by four per cent in 2015-Member 2016, with 3,303 attacks up from 3,177, but burglary fell by 9.7 per cent to 953 incidents in the 12 months to November 2016.

Now calls have gone out to Mayor of London Sadiq Khan to launch City Hall's own research to discover if the capital's increasingly-deteriorating air quality is linked to the increase in violence.

Caroline Pidgeon, the Liberal Democrat member of the GLA's General Assembly and a leading campaigner on air pollution, said: "The link between pollution and violent behaviour might seem far-fetched, but there is a growing body of evidence which suggests there is a direct connection."

"Understanding the possible connection between air pollution and violent crime is vital if we are to tackle both these scourges that face the capital. The Mayor of London is not only the elected Police Commissioner but he also has a legal responsibility to tackle health inequalities in the capital. On both these grounds the Mayor should not hesitate in ensuring the potential link between air pollution and violent crime is properly investigated."

Witnesses to killing 'should do decent thing'

Salim Coulter

THE police chief leading the hunt for Salim Coulter's killer has urged witnesses to "do the right thing" and come forward with information after detectives made three more arrests.

DCI Noel McHugh renewed his appeal for anyone with information to help police track down the gunman.

Salim, 24, of White City, was shot outside Jerky's restaurant in Walham Grove, Fulham, last month.

Detectives have launched a wide-ranging investigation and have made several appeals for evidence and information.

Last week a 22-year-old man was arrested, on suspicion of murder, as he boarded a plane for Algeria at Heathrow Airport. Officers also apprehended a 23-year-old man and a 20-year-old man on suspicion of the same offence.

All three remained in police custody last week as Met chiefs stepped up their inquiries.

It comes a month after police arrested and charged 30-year-old Omar Hutson with Salim's murder.

DCI McHugh, who is leading the investigation, said: "While one man has been charged and a further three arrested, we still need to speak to everyone who witnessed events on the day of Salim's murder and to everyone who may have any knowledge of his fatal shooting."

"We have spoken to a number of people so far but I believe there are still more people out there that can help us with our investigation, and I am urging those people to do the right thing and to speak to us."

Anyone with information can contact police on 020 8785 8099 or 101.

OPINION

HERE in London we pride ourselves on our principles of tolerance and understanding. We live, after all, in the most diverse and multi-cultural city on the planet – a fact of which we should all be proud.

Most of us live in perfect harmony and demonstrate to the rest of the world every day how we can all prosper by pulling together. Sadly, however, it is the actions of a vocal minority that often warp our understanding of community relations.

This week we again report on incidents of vile racial hatred targeting members of the Muslim faith.

In Hammersmith a woman wearing a hijab was screamed at and spat on as she sat in a restaurant and ate fish and chips. Only days later a man from Fulham was sentenced for orchestrating a campaign of hate promoting white supremacist views and Islamophobic rhetoric.

It is barely six months since thousands of people marched through the streets of the borough in the name of unity after spiteful xenophobic graffiti was scrawled across the Polish Social and Cultural Association building in Hammersmith in the wake of the Brexit vote.

Hammersmith and Fulham council is to be commended for the strong and active stance it has taken against these racist attacks.

But as Nahella Ashraf argues on the front page of our Hammersmith edition today, we should be prepared to confront more of these outrages in the months to come.

We cannot leave all the work to our community leaders. The onus must be on all of us to stand up to bigots when they publicise their intolerance.

The diversity and mix of faiths in London should be the mast to which we nail our colours.

Now more than ever it is essential that we fight for the freedoms we once took for granted.

Ill-judged attack on 4x4 drivers

YOUR recent article announcing a war on 4x4s in a bid to improve the dreadful air quality of much of Kensington and Chelsea not only unfairly scapegoats SUV drivers but it is also ill-judged.

Although it has long been accepted that 4x4s do indeed “gas guzzle”, one cannot just lay the blame for the pollution of the royal borough on those who have worked hard to afford such vehicles – what about the pollution caused by the incessant stream of builders’ trucks and HGVs which residents have had to endure for years now?

Not only do big lorries represent a far more intimidating presence than 4x4s to other road-users, in particular cyclists, they are hardly the greenest of vehicles and I would contend that they have been responsible for worsening much of the bad air quality during the recent boom in development of many K&C properties.

Lord only knows how bad the builders will make things when lorries and tipper trucks are hurtling up the King’s Road once the controversial development for the new Chelsea Crossrail begins. I should imagine that we shall all be choking on the pavements and will be forced to shop wearing masks.

RBKC Council takes air pollution very seriously and it is to be commended for its pioneering scheme to plant hedging alongside busy roads in order to absorb many of the noxious fumes. Perhaps this inspired idea could now be extended with hedges running up the centre of all of the borough’s most polluted routes? A two-mile wall of privet running the length of the King’s Road would be most welcome.

Advice on staying healthy in winter

ONE of the most effective ways to keep yourself well during winter is to stay warm.

Keeping warm over the winter months can help prevent colds, flu or more serious health conditions such as heart attacks, pneumonia and depression.

Cold homes have a significant impact on your health, so it is important to keep your home warm as well as your body. As temperatures continue to drop it is vital we all look after ourselves and our families in the right ways.

The chances of becoming Drivers of 4x4s are unfairly being made scapegoats for air pollution in Kensington and Chelsea, according to correspondent Mrs B Chambers unwell over this period are higher if you’re vulnerable to cold-related illnesses because of one or more of the following: you’re over 65; you’re on a low income and can’t afford heating; you have a long-term health condition, such as heart, lung or kidney disease; you are disabled.

If you are 65 or over, have reduced mobility, or have a health condition, you should heat your home to at least 18C. Make sure you also wear enough clothes to stay warm.

If you’re under 65 and healthy and active, you can safely have your house cooler than 18C if you’re comfortable with this temperature. You can also use a hot water bottle to keep warm whilst in bed.

Food is a vital source of energy, which helps keep your body warm. If possible try to make sure you have hot meals at least once a day and hot drinks regularly throughout the day.

It is well known that exercise is good for your overall health but it can also be efficient in keeping you warm during winter. If you can stay active, even at a moderate level, then it can bring health benefits.

It is important to dress appropriately during the winter and wearing lots of thin layers helps to maintain body heat better than one thick layer. Clothes made from cotton, wool or fleecy fibres are particularly good at maintaining body heat.

Mental health must be priority

IT'S important to see the Prime Minister talking about mental health and it shows how far we have come in bringing the experiences of people with mental-health problems up the political agenda.

Mental health should be at the heart of government, and at the heart of society and communities – it's been on the periphery for far too long.

We welcome the announcements around a focus on prevention in schools and workplaces, and support for people in crisis.

The proof will be in the difference it makes to the day-to-day experience of the one in four who will experience a mental-health problem this year.

Mental health is everyone's business and we need to see sustained leadership to make sure services and support improve for all of us with mental-health problems. It has been neglected for decades – we need to see it made a priority for decades to come to make sure everyone with mental-health problems can live the life they want to lead.

Apprentices mean cheap workforce

TO continue to thrive, London's businesses and workforce need the skills to drive the economy forward. But there are significant gaps in the skills required to do this, notably in construction and the creative industries.

Apprenticeships are widely viewed as a solution to London's skills crisis; a crisis which may worsen in the context of Brexit. They should also provide an alternative route to decent and well-paid, skilled employment opportunities.

The government's commitment to an apprenticeship levy and the new mayoral administration in London offers an opportunity to make sure apprenticeships in London do both of these things. It is vital this opportunity is not squandered.

The traditional view of apprenticeships is that of school leavers being taken on by a business to learn a trade. The reality is very different with around half of apprenticeships in London being carried out by over-25s, many "apprenticeships" effectively constituting in-work training for those already employed. All too many apprenticeships do not lead to permanent,

The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge are campaigning for an end to the stigmatising of the mentally ill – and the chief executive of Mind says that mental health must be made a priority by government for decades to come quality employment and there is still evidence that some apprenticeships are effectively a means for some employers to access cheap labour.

Unlike in other countries, such as Germany, apprenticeships remain comparatively low-status in the UK. Some of the apprentices that committee members met at an informal round table told us how they had been actively discouraged by schools and families from taking up apprenticeships. This is due to no small part to the low pay and low-skilled nature of too many apprenticeships.

For the status of apprenticeships to change, and for them to be a viable route to up-skilling London's workforce and an affordable option for potential apprentices, this needs to change.

Within existing apprenticeships there are particular issues of diversity and equality of opportunity, outcomes and pay levels. Apprentices and those from a black and ethnic-minority background are more likely to work in the low-paid health and retail sectors, while male apprentices dominate construction and engineering.

Male apprentices get paid 21 per cent more per hour – and 16 per cent of women report being out of work at the end of their apprenticeship, compared to six per cent of men.

Progress in making apprenticeships a genuine route into work for people with disabilities has also been too slow. The focus on numbers of apprenticeships rather than quality and outcomes masks a widening inequality and unfairness within the apprenticeship system.

The Skills for London taskforce can play a significant role in improving the apprenticeship offer in London and should consider how hurdles experienced by women, disabled people and those from a BME background can be overcome particularly by exploring the feasibility of flexible and part-time apprenticeships.

Over the next few years, there is an opportunity to give the concept of apprenticeships a new lease of life and use them both to benefit London and the Londoners who take up apprenticeships.

Poorest are being hit the hardest

AS you report, Hammersmith and Fulham council is freezing its share of our council-tax bills this year. But I'm afraid our total council-tax bill will rise for the first time in 11 years.

That is because the new mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, is increasing the precept by 1.5 per cent – which is £4.02p for those on band D.

Back in 2006 the then-Labour council increased its share by another 1.5 per cent (on top of much bigger increases in earlier years) for the coming financial year. The then-mayor of London, Ken Livingstone, increased his precept by 13.3 per cent. The upshot was that the total bill for a band-D household went up from £1.158 to £1.206.

In 2006 the Conservatives were elected and cut the council tax by three per cent in the following financial year, 2007-08. Then by another three per cent for 2008-09, then another three per cent for 2009-10, then by another three per cent for 2010-11. A pattern was starting to emerge.

There was a freeze in 2011-12 but then a cut of 3.7 per cent in 2012-13, another three per cent in 2013-14 and another cut of three per cent in 2014-15.

For the couple of years the reduction in bills was unfortunately partially offset by Mr Livingstone's tax hikes (he put up the precept by 5.3 per cent in 2007-08 and another two per cent in 2008-09.) But in 2008 Boris Johnson became mayor of London and for his eight years at City Hall the precept was frozen and then cut.

Labour won control of Hammersmith and Fulham in 2014 promising to cut council tax at a faster rate than the Conservatives managed. Each year the Labour group leader Cllr Stephen Cowan had stood up saying that the three per cent council tax cut did not go far enough.

But in 2015-16 he only managed a one per cent cut, then in 2016-17 a freeze. However we still enjoyed a fall in our bill for 2016-17 because in his final budget as mayor of London, Mr Johnson cut his share – the precept – by 6.4 per cent.

Sometimes people say that the sums involved are trivial. But they are not cumulatively to those on a tight budget. This year the band-D bill is £1,004 – so just over £200 lower than 2006. For some that's the difference between whether they can afford a holiday or not.

Another claim is that it is "impossible" to cut the council tax any further. But in Wandsworth the band-D council tax is £680. In Westminster it is £669. So the increase we will see this year represents a very regrettable change in direction – and one that hits the poorest the hardest.

Capital's tech sector is amazing

I AM so proud to be helping our tech sector approach Brexit.

Our great city rightly has a reputation as a world-leading hub for technical innovation and digital entrepreneurship.

While the London tech sector may not be on the scale of Silicon Valley, in terms of sheer inventiveness, creativity and an ability to turn bright ideas into working, profitable products or services, it is still amazing.

I am a huge fan of our country's tech companies and our tech professionals. I was once told that if the tech sector had been asked to fix the European Union, they might well have suggested rebooting it.

Sadly that was not an option but I do hope the voice of our tech sector will be heard as our future outside the EU takes shape.

With that in mind, I was very pleased to be asked by the trade body, techUK, to become a member of its independent Brexit advisory panel.

The panel will work independently of techUK and is formed, as they say, of leading experts across different disciplines, including economics, politics, international relations, diplomacy, higher education and venture capital. Other members include former cabinet secretary Lord Gus O'Donnell, economist Vicky Pryce and former European Commission digital guru Robert Madelin.

We are all giving our time free and will offer informal but well-informed advice on how the UK should navigate the Brexit process while ensuring we remain at the forefront of innovation and harnessing the power of technology.

We will help shape techUK's Brexit priorities and advise its board about government thinking on key areas such as:

- asking the right questions about the opportunities and impact of leaving the EU and approaches to renegotiation for the UK tech sector;
- analysing and optimising the issues of most strategic importance to the future of the UK digital economy;

- applying sustained influence to institutions and individuals, in Whitehall, Westminster, Brussels and beyond.

Quite a task but one worth taking on.

I have been excited about tech since writing code for my ZX Spectrum and then writing machine code at university. London's start-up community is vibrant, exciting and dynamic, and it must stay that way.

Of course there will be challenges but by getting Brexit right we will be able to keep the doors open to the best global tech talent and create more jobs, prosperity and opportunities in our city.

A key question will be how those tech firms that do business in other EU countries can continue to enjoy the greatest possible access to other EU countries under a deal, while respecting the result of last year's referendum.

For example, we will need to look at whether companies offering services in the EU will be required to have their data servers physically sited within the EU if they are to carry EU data and sited within the UK to carry UK data.

We will need to consider how we can maximise the flexibility that enables our tech sector to continue to attract customers and talent from all over the world.

On skills, we need to ensure we continue to create our own pool of domestic talent while remaining open to attract the brightest and the best in this sector from across the world, no longer discriminating against those from outside the EU.

As well as the opportunities, these are legitimate concerns for the sector and for London. techUK hopes that we will play our part in ensuring our negotiators do not overlook these concerns when the fine detail of any deal begins to be laid down.

And of course London's tech firms will always have one rather potent card up their sleeve – their ability to innovate.

If ever the politicians, economists and mandarins are struggling to find a solution to a particular problem, my money will be on the tech folk to come up with it.

If and when someone in Brussels or London says "That would be impossible", I expect a tech entrepreneur in Shoreditch to say "Have you tried this?". A tech solution making what some may have deemed impossible, possible.

Forget Brexit – proposed poll could send royals on hustings

FANS of the public being consulted for their say – so by politicians who need their hand held to cross a road will doubtless be knocked out with delight to learn that plans are afoot for yet another furious argument-inciting referendum, this time on the matter of Rexit.

Members of the royalty-wrecking party Republic are quietly planning to push for a referendum on the future of the monarchy the instant that Her Majesty passes over to that realm in the sky.

Although many Brits are fed up to the back teeth with the recent stream of requests of how to govern from those they have already elected to do the job, the popularity of DIY government is set to rear its controversy-inducing head again.

The UK's republican movement is preparing to mount a campaign for a referendum on the monarchy – whether or not to abolish it or to continue with King Charles – when the Queen dies, an event which most of Britain hopes will be many years off.

At a meeting of the Alliance of European Republic Movements in Madrid, Republic's chief executive Graham Smith revealed the drive for a Rexit.

He told anti-monarchy delegates: "When the Queen dies, the moment she is declared dead, Charles is King. So there is no gap. And there is certainly no official plan for a referendum. He is King immediately. The coronation would be about six months later.

"So that will be an opportunity, after the funeral and before the coronation, for us to do some campaigning and say 'Hang on a minute, this is the 21st century, if we are going to have a new head of state then perhaps we want to have a vote'.

"Then if we have that vote, it can't just be 'Do you want Charles?' – it has to be 'Which person do you want?' and it has to be a free and fair election."

These comments follow others by Mr Smith at Republic's annual conference in 2015 against portraying the Queen's death as "an opportunity" for anti-monarchists.

But in Madrid he admitted: "It is an opportunity to campaign but it is not going to be an easy campaign. We

Royal London's idea of how the candidates for the top job might campaign if Republic's proposal for an election to determine who should be head of state comes to fruition are going have to work hard to get that referendum.

"That (the Queen's death) will make a big difference. In the UK a lot of support for the monarchy is to do with the fact that we have had the same Queen for a very long time and most people can't remember a time when she wasn't on the throne."

Although Mr Smith said in Madrid "We are going to get to that point where there are no monarchies left in Europe and that's a dream I want to make happen in my lifetime", polls reveal that only 20 per cent of Brits feel the same.

However, in the highly unlikely circumstance that any government should back Republic's drive for a "which person do you want?" Rexit, chaos and bitter rows could result – as we saw during the independent Scotland referendum and the Brexit vote.

For instance, according to the results of an Ipsos Mori poll of last year, although Her Majesty reigns supreme over all her family in popularity with the public, with an approval rating of 80 per cent, the Prince of Wales scored only 60 per cent – 13 points behind that of Prince William.

Constitutionally the Republic idea could threaten crisis as it has been established for eras that when one monarch passes, the crown then passes to the next in line – not to whoever the public most fancies at the time.

Technically, a "which person do you want?" plan for the next monarch could lead to a repeat of the Boaty McBoatface farce which last year surrounded the poll for the public to name a new polar research vessel, and Britain could end up with Katy McCuteface as the head of state.

We can imagine the fallout and confusion that would result if the royals were forced by a hare-brained idea to go to the hustings and launch individual "vote for me" campaigns to the public – "Charlie Isn't Working, Vote Andrew", "Can She Fix It? Yes Anne Can", "British Rule Is Harry's Game", or "It's The Eugenie, Stupid".

But undaunted by the impracticality, let alone the unpopularity, of a Rexit, Republic is pressing ahead with its drive to unseat the royals by last week launching a new campaign called How To Win The Argument on the matter of monarchy.

On its website it announced: "Republic wants to see the monarchy abolished and the Queen replaced with a democratically elected head of state. We'll win this campaign with clear and concise points and effective responses to the many common and misleading myths put forward in favour of the monarchy."

"Republic has a lot of experience in making effective arguments on air, in the Press and in live debates. But we need to keep the arguments fresh and up to date."

"We'll be developing our arguments throughout 2017 – making sure we can continue to build an effective case for a republic and challenge the myths."

"With each issue we'll be asking for your views, and using your input to shape our arguments."

"We'll be talking about Britain's political system, democratic principles and everything that's wrong about the royal household – and tackling myths about tourism and trade, confusion about the Crown Estates and questions about the future of the Commonwealth."

"This project will give us – and you – the tools to make a stronger case for a republic. The project is starting with a common question that goes right to the heart of our campaign: Why do we need a head of state?"

Further investigation of the site reveals Republic's three-step future plans:

- Becoming a high-profile, household-name organisation that influences public opinion, sets the media agenda and draws active support from politicians of all parties.

- Leading the campaign for a referendum on the monarchy, with a manifesto commitment from one or all of the main parties.

- Our ultimate destination: a referendum resulting in a decisive "yes" in favour of a republic.

Discussion on whether a republic is remotely likely has been interrupted by the need to swat the pig that is flying around the room.

Save nearly £5,000 on your version of 'the most famous ring in the world'

THE many Chinese fans of Royal London will be delighted to learn that we can save them £4,965 on their apparently feverish purchase of "the most famous ring in the world".

Recent reports have it that royalists from Beijing and Moscow are desperate to own replicas of the engagement ring once given to Diana, Princess of Wales, by Prince Charles. The famous sapphire and diamond ring, now worn by the Duchess of Cambridge, was purchased for an undisclosed sum by Prince Charles in 1981.

Given its history, the ring is now considered priceless but replicas are available and Garrard, the Mayfair jewellers preferred by the Royal Family for almost 300 years, has reportedly been inundated with requests from Chinese and Russian couples for whom it is a must-have gift.

"The Diana Ring is our most popular piece of jewellery," said Joanne Miller, the company's chief executive told The Daily Telegraph. "In one week alone in December we had three orders for them, and had to work flat out to make them in time for Christmas."

Although the esteemed jeweller stresses that it would never create nor sell an exact replica of The Diana Ring, which would be bad form, copies start at £5,000, with prices rising for those who require a sapphire of the same size as the original.

The Daily Telegraph cheekily suggested that the Albemarle Street jeweller might be a port of call for Prince Harry, should he wish his squeeze Meghan Markle to one day wear a "Hers and Hers" ring that matched the one worn by the Duchess of Cambridge.

Although we at Royal London consider the likelihood of two royal brides wearing a ring of the same design to be somewhat fanciful, if Harry harboured such a bizarre wish then he – and the Chinese buyers – need look no further than his granny's own shop.

For the Royal Collection Shop, the home of official royal gifts and souvenirs commissioned by Buckingham Palace, is currently selling a ring which is remarkably similar to Princess Diana's.

Although it is not quite of the same quality as the original – the Buckingham Palace Sapphire Ring being designed of a "sapphire-coloured stone set with sparkling crystals in a hypoallergenic metal" – the popular item is available at Her Majesty's store at a significant saving, priced just £35.

William heads up children's charity

PRINCE William has stepped forward to lead one of London's most important but lower-profiled charities, the Metropolitan and City Police Orphans Fund.

It is hoped that with the prince behind it, the key charity will achieve more public support and awareness like that which he has brought to his other good causes, which include mental health, conservation and action on addictions.

Every day Londoners trust their lives to the safe hands of the Met – but when tragedy strikes the orphans fund is there to care for those left behind when officers lose their lives or are seriously injured.

"We are proud and delighted to announce that HRH the Duke of Cambridge has agreed to be the patron of our charity beginning this month," said a spokesman for the fund.

"The Orphans Fund began in 1870 as an orphanage, which we believe makes it the oldest police charity in the world. In 2020 we will be marking the 150th anniversary. The orphanage closed in 1937 and became the present fund, which makes 2017 the 80th year.

"We hope to mark these occasions with functions for the orphans and their families who are children of deceased or severely injured Metropolitan and City police officers.

"It is especially pleasing the Prince William will be our patron at the time of these anniversaries. Our first royal patron was Queen Victoria and we are privileged that the charity's links with the Royal Family are to continue.

The charity is mainly funded by the interest and dividends from the money that was invested when the orphanage was sold, by a percentage of the contributions serving officers make to the Metropolitan and City Police Benevolent Funds and public donations.

In 2015 it was able to give more than £1 million to the kids of deceased colleagues. To back the fund, go to met-city-orphans.24sq.com.

Princess' kindness celebrated

DIANA, Princess of Wales once urged: "Carry out a random act of kindness, with no expectation of reward, safe in the knowledge that one day someone might do the same for you."

Therefore it is fitting that in the year which marks the 20th anniversary of her death, she is to be remembered with National Kindness Day.

The Diana Award, the charity established by the government in order to continue her excellent work, is to run the big day on a date in March in order to inspire new generations by the example of the queen of compassion.

The charity has also announced a special Legacy Award marking the 20th anniversary of the death of the princess – a project which has the support of her sons The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Harry.

"This award will be presented to 20 exceptional young people, aged nine to 18, from across the world for their selfless commitment to transforming the lives of others across the world at a special Legacy Ceremony in May," said a spokesman for the charity which is committed to fostering change through practical action with young people.

"These young people will be selected from a poll of nominations by an independent judging panel chaired by Dame Julia Clevedon, founder of Step Up To Serve."

As well as receiving the Legacy Award, recipients will have access to a unique development programme which will provide them with the opportunity to enhance their skills in four key areas – leadership, community development, social entrepreneurship and technology for good.

"As the search begins for these exceptional young people who embody the late princess' qualities of compassion, kindness and service, The Diana Award calls out to communities and groups across the world to nominate a young person, who is deserving of such honour. The deadline for nominations is Friday March 17," said the spokesman for the charity which has trained 21,500 anti-bullying ambassadors, awarded 47,000 who are making a difference to the lives of others and has trained and mentored 2,000 young people.

Visit diana-award.org.uk to nominate someone for a Legacy Award.

Tessy Ojo, chief executive of The Diana Award said: "Diana, Princess of Wales is widely remembered for her values of compassion, kindness and service to others, irrespective of their culture, race or background.

"Twenty years since her death it's heartening to know that her legacy lives on through the lives of thousands of young people across the world.

"Our theme for this 20th anniversary year is centred on Princess Diana's values of kindness, compassion and service. We know there are truly exceptional young people across the world who deserve to be recognised. We urge the public to nominate them for The Diana Award."

The Diana Award will also be launching a commemorative website celebrating Princess Diana's legacy – dianaslegacy.co.uk – and members of the public will be invited to add their thoughts and memories of the much-missed great woman to the website.

A SIGHTSEEING experience like no other took to the streets of Central London last week with the launch of a brand new bus tour – for dogs.

Man's best friend was behind the wheel as the K9 double decker stopped at Downing Street and Buckingham Palace on its whirlwind trip.

The route also took in some of the capital's best dog-walking spots as it passed Hyde Park, Green Park and Kensington Palace Gardens.

Dog owners and their pampered pooches were treated to the free ride to celebrate the launch of insurance company More Than's Doggyssenti pet-care service.

Theatres offering more chances of a career in spotlight

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

LONDON theatres are offering new apprenticeships to young people seeking careers in the spotlight.

The London Theatre Consortium of 14 leading theatres has announced plans for a fourth year of its apprenticeship programme offering up to a further 12 apprenticeships across the group this year.

In a new development, the LTC will work with the National College for the Creative and Cultural Industries to offer the apprenticeship qualifications and will pilot a new apprenticeship training hub at the Lyric Hammersmith.

The announcement comes as the consortium published a new report on the programme's first three years which sets out how an investment of £800,000 has created 56 entry-level apprenticeships into theatre across a broad range of disciplines including technical theatre, costume, community arts, venue operations, producing and administration.

"The report shows how apprenticeships can help arts organisations to diversify their workforces and to create new routes into a career in theatre," said a spokesman for the consortium.

"Sixty two per cent of apprentices to date have been from non-white-British backgrounds and 27 per cent have a disability, most hidden.

"The programme was also effective in reaching people from socioeconomic backgrounds that are not currently well represented in theatre staff teams.

"All apprentices were paid at least the adult National Minimum Wage, regardless of their age, to make sure that no-one was barred from taking a role for financial reasons."

As well as college and workplace training towards an accredited qualification, apprentices were given mentoring support, help to plan their careers and next steps, and provided with opportunities to build their contacts and networks.

Of 48 apprentices, 23 have gone on to further employment in the arts and 11 will shortly complete their level-two qualifications.

"Apprentices reported that their self-confidence, organisational skills and work readiness improved enormously. Employers reported that managing an apprentice had encouraged them to reconsider their standard working practices to support better inclusivity and access," said the spokesman.

The programme has been co-funded by CCSkills' Creative Employment Programme, AGE, City Bridge Foundation, LTC employers and the LTC itself.

LTC director Emma Rees said: "We worked really hard to find talented young people who we don't usually hear from when we are recruiting.

"Almost everyone working in the arts will say at some point that they owe their position to someone who saw something in them and believed in them. That's brilliant if you're there to be 'spotted' but impossible if you'd never find yourself in that position in the first place.

"We decided we needed to be proactive and to go out and look for talent and potential – and we found it."

Sam Maynard, education manager of Donmar Warehouse, said: "Working with apprentices makes me question a lot of practice that is taken as read within the organisation, and I think that is a really good thing for the culture of an organisation."

Sian Alexander, executive director of the Lyric Hammersmith, said: "The cultural sector is a real UK success story in terms of growth and economic development and London is one of the most multi-cultural cities in the world, yet the workforce of the theatre sector is still under-representative of London's diversity.

"From the start, we have seen this collaborative programme as an important way to diversify the workforce, to reach and train young people from backgrounds that are currently underrepresented in the theatre sector.

"Working together has been key to this. I don't think the London theatres could have embraced apprenticeships on the scale that they have, and with the success they have, if it hadn't been for that collaborative approach, as part of the London Theatre Consortium.

"Although the funding climate makes it harder now, we are committed to continuing to work together to maintain the momentum we have achieved and to create open and accessible opportunities for talented young people from all backgrounds in our theatres."

Recruitment for the fourth year of apprenticeships has now begun, with apprenticeships starting in March 2017.

Dancing strictly on limits for Ore

AFTER triumphantly lifting the Glitterball Trophy as the winner of Strictly Come Dancing late last year, BBC Sport presenter Ore Oduba has got the bug for ballroom and is about to embark on the live UK tour, which will visit London next month, writes Nicky Sweetland.

The 31-year-old broadcaster is astonished that alongside his partner, World Show Dance champion Joanne Clifton, he won the coveted title, and said: "I was that shocked. I didn't think, for a second of the whole series, we could win. It wasn't why I'd signed up to do the show and even after all of it, the intention was just to have an amazing time. By the end of the final I was just beaming because I'd had one of the best experiences of my life."

Oduba grew up in Wimborne, Dorset, and had virtually no dancing experience before the challenge of taking part in the Saturday night hit television programme.

He laughs and tells me: "I think there's a club in Bournemouth called Elements and I spent a few nights in there, but otherwise my experience of dancing was slim to nought and only in freestyle."

"I danced at my wedding but none of the shapes had any sort of mirroring of Latin and ballroom. I wouldn't have wanted to embarrass myself on the Strictly dance floor with any of that. I didn't have any experience, so for me doing Strictly was the opportunity to learn to dance from the best in the world."

Joanne is currently starring in the tour of the musical Thoroughly Modern Millie and so Ore will dance with her sister-in-law, Karen Clifton, for the stage spectacular.

"I'm just so lucky to have gone from having one incredible woman as my dance partner to another. It's a cliché to say, but I felt like I was part of the family from day one."

Ore said: "It's been a seamless transition from one Clifton to another. Karen is similarly just so clever, a truly inspirational dancer, and I'm loving now being in her arms. Of course I miss Jo, like you would with any friend, but I want her to be happy and I know she is so happy doing musical theatre. She's a star and she's going to fly."

Nicky Sweetland and Ore Oduba dance their way through this week's interview

The tour will also feature the other two finalists from the 2016 series, Louise Redknapp and Danny Mac, as well as Daisy Lowe, Lesley Joseph and former chancellor Ed Balls, who will be grooving along to Gangnam Style once again.

The troop of acclaimed professional dancers will also join the cast for the festival of dance, which will be judged and commented on by Anita Rani, Karen Hardy, the show's producer Craig Revel Horwood and the now retired head judge Len Goodman.

There promises to be some spectacular group numbers as well as dances, which will be very familiar to fans of the television show.

Ore tells me: "We are doing numbers that the audiences will have seen before. There are a couple of changes, but I'll keep the surprise. We are doing numbers that I love doing and I can't wait to do them again and I can't wait to show people on an even bigger stage"

The Strictly Come Dancing Live Tour will culminate in performances on February 9 and 10 at the SSE Arena Wembley and on February 11 and 12 at The O2. For further details, visit www.strictlycomedancinglive.com

A Clockwork Orange, Park Theatre, February 14

A Clockwork Orange opens at Park Theatre on February 14

ACTION To The Word's award-winning all-male production of Anthony Burgess' A Clockwork Orange, directed by Alexandra Spencer-Jones, will return to London following its acclaimed premiere in Edinburgh in 2011 and an international tour.

Billed as an electrifying and testosterone filled physical theatre horror show that exquisitely captures and transcends the spirit of Burgess' original literary masterpiece, A Clockwork Orange lures its audience into the glorious glass-edged nastiness of Manchester's underworld. A playtime of orgiastic ultraviolence and sexuality, it's the story of little Alex and the Droogs in their battle against the tedium of adolescence. An unapologetic celebration of the human condition, it remains as terrifyingly relevant today as when the book was published in 1962 and when Stanley Kubrick's film caused a stir in 1971.

Jonno Davies will return to the production to star as 'Alex', having played the role previously on two international tours. Other stage credits include A Midsummer Night's Dream (National Theatre/Latitude), Dracula (Arts Theatre/International tour) and Shakespeare in Love (Noel Coward). His screen credits include Milk and Honey, Kingsman: The Secret Service, Spotless and Hollyoaks.

He is joined on stage by Luke Baverstock, Sebastian Charles, Simon Cotton, Damien Hasson, Philip Honeywell, James Smoker, Will Stokes and Tom Whitelock.

A Clockwork Orange is directed by Alexandra Spencer-Jones, artistic director for Action to the Word, for which she has created Dracula (Arts Theatre/International Tour), A Midsummer Night's Dream (National Theatre/Latitude Festival) and Constance and Sinestra and the Cabinet of Screams (New Wimbledon Theatre/Latitude Festival).

Spencer-Jones said: "In a world where the pillars of leadership are crashing down around us, Burgess' timeless masterpiece brought to stage is more urgent than ever. There will always be a disaffected youth who are not listened to."

A Clockwork Orange* opens at Park Theatre on February 14 and plays until March 18. For further information, you can visit the website

Here's proof it's a mad, mad, Maddix world

COMEDIAN Jamali Maddix will bring his critically acclaimed unflinchingly funny debut hour, Chickens Come Home To Roost, to the Soho Theatre next month following a sold-out run in Edinburgh.

The creator of his own Viceland show, Hate Thy Neighbour, is an exciting new talent that over the last 18 months has cemented his path to worldwide success. The young comedian, whose many fans include Spike Jonze, takes a dark, frank and honest look at life through the eyes of a self-confessed miscreant, whose upbringing, friends and family have given him a distinctly considered and shrewd outlook on issues of race, economics and the law.

In a show based on personal choices and the salvation of a past life, Jamali is now trying to deviate away from his trouble-making days to become something akin to vaguely respectable as he considers his current lifestyle against those of his peers, and how different opportunities and choices can lead to extremely different outcomes. His natural confidence and charm allow him to tread gracefully across more sensitive topics, leaving many of his contemporaries behind.

Jamali has also appeared on some of the most popular TV panel shows, including Live at the Apollo, 8 out of 10 Cats and The John Bishop Show, as well as being one of the faces for the Viceland TV channel with his own series, Hate Thy Neighbour. Other TV credits include Alan Davies As Yet Untitled (BBC), Safe Word (ITV2) and Live At The Comedy Store (Comedy Central).

Within his first two years of performing, Jamali won the Comedy Café New Act of the Year Competition and the Chortle Student Comedy Award, and at the 2015 Edinburgh Fringe he joined a long list of comedy stars as part of the prestigious Pleasance Comedy Reserve. Since then he has supported Jim Jefferies at London's Hyde Park and has performed at many of the UK's biggest festivals, including Bestival, Altitude, Camp Bestival and Latitude.

Jamali Maddix will be at the Soho Theatre from February 27 until March 4. For more information, visit the website www.sohotheatre.com

APLAY about a terrorist attack in London might not be everyone's idea of an entertaining evening out at the theatre – but Stuart Slade has scored a real triumph with his rom-com-come-tragedy BU21 at Trafalgar Studio2.

Following an acclaimed run at Theatre503, the play, which focuses on a group of survivors, gets the elements of comedy and tragedy spot on, with a powerful and sometimes gruesome set of tales.

It is told anecdotally by a mishmash of West Londoners.

We are given the news that a plane from New York to London has been blown out of the sky over Fulham by a shoulder-mounted rocket launcher, leaving whole streets and communities felled in its wake.

An office worker has lost her mother, a brash city banker his cheating girlfriend, and a young Asian man his father in a clever twist which ultimately tests our stereotypes.

There is also a victim who has suffered life-changing injuries and a caricatured working-class chav who has gained celebrity status after an appearance on television in the immediate aftermath of the tragedy, alongside a dithering socialite struggling to come to terms with the vision of horror she faced when one of the victims landed in her back garden. Nothing and no-one is spared the trauma, with all of the repugnant details potently depicted – burned and severed flesh described as “like pulled pork” and a body described as “meat” – but the telling never feels irreverent and instead adds necessary realism to set the tone.

Dan Pick's virtually bare stage, save for some plastic chairs and a tea trolley, further allows the focus to be the story and the impact of the horrific event, with the actors' intricate emotional journey fully exposed with the audience in such close proximity.

Alex Forsyth steals the show as the arrogant, laddish banker, uncomfortably breaking the fourth wall and including audience members in his rantings, while Florence Roberts and Graham O'Mara illustrate the fact that an event of this magnitude doesn't discriminate between class.

Hard-hitting, traumatic yet extremely amusing, BU21 encapsulates the pessimistic British sense of humour – and with a fictional horror story, which is entirely plausible, it leaves you laughing with a disquieting sense of foreboding.

BU21 runs at Trafalgar Studio2 until February 18. For more details, visit atgtickets.com.

An unmissable spectacular

Amaluna – performed by Cirque du Soleil
Royal Albert Hall

I'VE heard great things about Cirque du Soleil but the return of their celebrated show Amaluna marked my first experience of the famed circus practitioners, writes Nicky Sweetland.

Although I've always loved acrobatics and juggling – I actually own a unicycle – I was a put off from circus when at a young age by the uncomfortable wooden seats, sawdust and the chill of an unheated big top.

It turns out that my resistance to the art form is unfounded, however, and the performance by the world-renowned masters of calisthenics proved one of the most thrilling theatrical experiences I've ever experienced.

Loosely based on Shakespeare's The Tempest, Amaluna is packed with breathtaking aerial stunts, astonishingly acrobatics and stunning symbolism.

With a thumping rock soundtrack and dazzling stage effects, the love story becomes a spectacle – and when the clowning expertise of Mainha and Papulya is added to the mix, you are greeted with all of the elements of a traditional circus but with a whole lot more pizzazz.

Highlights include an asymmetric-bar routine performed by a troupe of feisty goddesses, an aerial hoop display executed 30 feet above the cavernous auditorium, and a mesmerising water sequence which is driven by the narrative of the central character's burgeoning love.

There are themes of female empowerment woven into the plot, with 70 per cent of the cast made up of women and the awesome band entirely propelled by girl power.

A theatrical spectacular that is not to be missed, Amaluna continues at the Royal Albert Hall until February 26. For more details about the show, visit royalalberthall.com.

Sunday January 29
Legendary British metal band fronted by iconic singer Ozzy Osbourne. Most famous for rock classic Paranoid, the band are still touring with original members Tony Iommi and Geezer Butler. The O2 show is slated as part of the band's final ever tour before hanging up their instruments.

MELODIC, direct and brimming with emotional urgency, the long-awaited return of indie architects British Sea Power is here at last.

Throughout their colourful lifespan as a band, the Brighton outfit have taken a broad and panoramic perspective that has drawn on historical events while mirroring the ageless wonders of the natural world.

Their comeback album – Let The Dancers Inherit The Party – continues in the band's grand tradition, covering subject matter that spans the astronomical glory of the star-spangled night sky to the twisted methodology of media manipulation.

A contemporary record for troubled times, the album alludes to a world full of chaos and disorder while setting out an agenda of optimism and hope.

"It was made to a background of politicians perfecting the art of unabashed lying, of social-media echo chambers, of clickbait and electronic Tonka toys to keep us entertained and befuddled," says guitarist Martin Noble.

"All this can easily make the individual feel futile. But I think we've ended up addressing this confusion in an invigorating way, rather than imprisoning the listener in melancholy."

Musically, it's British Sea Power's most direct album to date – and perhaps the first to hold on to a coherent sense of mood throughout.

Recorded last year – part in London, part in Sussex, part on the Isle of Skye – it follows the band's string of five LPs on the iconic Rough Trade label.

So committed are they to the cause that BSP now hold the proud honour of being the longest continually signed band in the label's history.

While Rough Trade have been a vital factor in the band's rise to fame, so have their fans.

The new album was actually licensed from the band's own Golden Chariot label to Caroline International – and funded entirely by its remarkably dedicated audience.

Donations were collected via a 'pay-in' programme, with pledges enabling the listener to cash in on anything from a limited-edition box set of the album to a £1,500 tattoo that allows entry to all of the band's future shows.

British Sea Power may be big thinkers. But their faith in their fans demonstrates again a fascination with the individual in a global age. "There wasn't a plan to create an album with any particular subject matter but we've kind of ended up with a case of 'think global, act local'," explains Noble.

"An album where individuals are dealing with their domestic and personal lives against a background of uncontrollable international lunacy."

Let The Dancers Inherit The Party follows the 2013 album Machineries Of Joy – a record praised by influential music magazine Q as "a triumph of sophisticated rock engineering".

In the four years since, British Sea Power have kept busy, releasing two film soundtracks, a reissue and a compilation.

They even found time to pen the theme music to BT Sport's coverage of the European Football Championships last summer.

All the while they have enthralled fans by playing gigs in ever more bizarre and unconventional locations, winning praise from celebrity followers including Doctor Who, Harry Potter and Sherlock Holmes – Peter Capaldi, Daniel Radcliffe and Benedict Cumberbatch have all declared an interest.

2017 may be the year of calm after the international storm that was its predecessor.

But British Sea Power are set to ride their own musical wave all the way to the top.

British Sea Power will perform at the O2 Shepherd's Bush Empire on Wednesday April 12. The new album, Let The Dancers Inherit The Party, is out on March 31.

Scatty, mad-hat method is just the ticket

REVIEW

Ross Noble
Richmond Theatre

"WITH my show titles I attempt to become the Ronseal of comedy – they do exactly what they say on the tin," says Geordie comic Ross Noble, describing his latest routine Brain Dump.

"This is me dumping all the stuff that's in my head into a theatrical context."

He revealed in a recent interview that the idea for the title actually came from a scathing Amazon review for one of his previous DVDs.

Describing the comedian's scattergun approach as a "brain dump" was supposed to be an insult – but Noble took the words as a compliment. It's a beautifully succinct way to sum up the freestyle wonder wander to which Noble treats his audience at the Richmond Theatre.

He catapults from one barmy idea to the next, it's as if he's constantly on a timer – only 15 seconds to crack the laugh from each brainwave before he jolts haphazardly on to the next.

It's hard to pick out the building blocks of Noble's routine, so prone is he to meandering wildly off-course.

But the scatty, mad-hat method is just the ticket, allowing the 40-something stand-up to build a rapport with his audience, which culminates in an end-of-show ovation for the front-row fans who unwittingly became the supporting cast.

Noble is famous on the circuit for his rambling monologues, often marauding miles off topic before boomeranging back to the thrust of his (often nonsensical) main point.

It may not be a masterclass in spinning the perfect argument – but Noble is a genius entertainer all the same.

NOTHING the world holds could match the love waiting for me in Mexico City, Morrissey once said. Of all the cities the legendary singer has performed in – as the frontman with The Smiths and later as a solo artist – he has singled out the South American capital as a home from home.

While he complains of toxic derision from the music Press in Britain, the boy who famously carried “a thorn in his side” is full of love for his Mexican cousins.

And, it seems, the feeling’s mutual. In Mexico, Morrissey has always been a prophet with honour. His songs of love, loss and longing, loaded with powerful imagery, have found a huge audience and chimed with generations raised on rancheras.

One band in particular – a Mexican super-group comprising some of the country’s best-known musicians – has begun to monetise this fandom.

Mexrissey, a bootleg tribute band of the most unusual variety, are in the midst of a UK tour taking to many of the stages graced by their hero over the years.

Combining Morrissey’s often morose lyrics detailing the trials of a frustrated English existence with upbeat mariachi music might seem something of a mismatch.

But Moz’s famous songs are reimagined with tenderness and attention to detail by skilful instrumentalists.

Andy Wood, director of the La Linea Festival in London, approached Mexican musician Camilo Lara with the initial idea three years ago.

“It just felt like time,” he said. “I had a sense of the feeling for Morrissey in Mexico and the way that his music could connect with so much in Mexican music.”

Mexrissey released their first album – No Manchester – last year (the title is now a cultural colloquialism for “Are you kidding me?”) after the band found stylistic similarities between the Smithsonian compositions.

The First Of The Gang To Die – probably Moz’s most overtly Mexican track, including its tragi-comic mobster hero Hector – is an obvious starting point. But the band also take on all manner of the singer’s hits, featuring versions of The Last Of The International Playboys, Suedehead and The More You Ignore Me, The Closer I Get among others.

Lara said: “I always thought that there were these invisible lines between what Morrissey and Manchester represents and what Mexican pop culture has.

“I think for the people that know the songs, I’m sure that they will be amazed that they can go into these directions of cumbia and boleros, and sound actually as if they were written in that style.”

Having said that, it’s the words, the playful turns of phrase and trademark wailing that are trickiest to translate.

“We try to get a glimpse of the poetry in Morrissey’s work and to capture the history, the anger and the happiness at the same time. That has been a challenge.”

The band performed their first show in April 2015 but have shot to notoriety in less than two years.

A sold-out main-stage debut at London’s La Linea Festival was soon followed by an emotional gig in Manchester, the spiritual home of Morrissey’s music.

And triumphant shows in New York and Los Angeles – where the singer now lives – have established Mexrissey on the international stage.

Their success is both a marker of Moz’s enduring appeal as an artist and his mythological musical status.

But it also goes to show that true greats never fail to inspire others to new and remarkable feats of invention.

Mexrissey perform at the O2 Shepherd’s Bush Empire on Saturday January 28. The album No Manchester is out now.

Ref: OPDC3038

Help businesses harness the potential of impressive regeneration.

This is your chance to shape London's largest regeneration project as part of the Mayor of London's Old Oak and Park Royal Development Corporation (OPDC). You'll help deliver the Mayor's vision for jobs and growth as you play your part in our plans for the regeneration and enhancement of the Park Royal industrial estate.

Leading the delivery of the Park Royal Strategy and Delivery Plan will involve working closely with the Park Royal business community to understand their needs and the issues they face. You will develop and manage focused support to enable these businesses to harness the benefits of the regeneration project. What's more, you will support OPDC to deliver programmes and projects, conduct business research, create policy, and to develop a 30-year vision for the development of the Park Royal industrial estate, which supports its economic and physical development.

You will come to us with a proven track record of project management, including driving the delivery of high profile, public facing or corporate projects. You will have experience of working with or alongside the public and private sector together with a sound understanding of the differences in their perspectives and values. The communication skills and credibility to build business relationships at all levels will be essential, as will familiarity with economics and business policies. Above all, you will have the drive and determination to ensure that Park Royal retains its position as London's largest and the UK's most successful industrial estate.

We are committed to being an inclusive employer and we are happy to consider flexible working arrangements and welcome applications from candidates seeking part time work as these roles are open to job share.

In addition to a good salary package, we offer an attractive range of benefits including 30 days' annual leave, interest free season ticket loan, interest free bicycle loan, childcare voucher scheme and a career average pension scheme.

Senior Engagement Officer

£41,827 per annum West London and Union Street, SE1

Ref: OPDC5001

Passionate about engaging with local communities? Motivated by the potential for regeneration to create new opportunities for local residents and businesses in London?

An exciting role has arisen at Old Oak and Park Royal Development Corporation (OPDC) for an individual with excellent communications, relationship management and interpersonal skills to lead the OPDC Engagement Strategy with local residents, community groups, businesses, boroughs, major stakeholders and partners within Old Oak and Park Royal in West London.

Established in April 2015 by the Mayor of London, OPDC is the local planning authority for Old Oak and Park Royal, and has powers to facilitate regeneration of the area. Working as part of the Communications and Engagement team, and with line management responsibilities, you will deliver the OPDC Community Engagement Strategy and support statutory consultation requirements as well as other corporate priorities. You will plan and manage statutory public consultation processes for the Local Plan, community engagement events, a youth engagement programme and work with developers using your expertise to advise on their consultations. You will have experience and be confident in engaging hard-to-reach groups using a variety of communications methods, processes and (on and offline) channels, and be comfortable using different research techniques. You'll also have the written communication skills to analyse and report on consultation findings.

As OPDC's eyes and ears locally, you will take a leading role to conduct stakeholder mapping and build relationships by spending 2-3 days a week meeting and engaging local communities, visiting local groups, attending workshops and events to understand aspirations and concerns and be clear on 'our story' and benefits for the area. You will be an ambassador for OPDC and use intelligence gathered from your engagements to maintain a stakeholder database, keep OPDC colleagues apprised and inform development of short and long-term projects at the Corporation.

Alex the great makes Fulham pay penalty

QUEENS Park Rangers goalkeeper Alex Smithies is laying claim to the title of penalty-saving king after his latest heroics earned his side a 1-1 draw in Saturday's feisty West London derby with Fulham.

When Smithies dived low to his right to push Chris Martin's spot-kick around the post at The Loft end, it was his sixth save from 10 penalties faced in QPR colours.

And it's the third time this season that Fulham have failed to convert from 12 yards against their local rivals. Back in October, Smithies denied Tom Cairney – and then Sone Aluko wasted his golden chance to make it 2-2 when he fired against a post in the fifth minute of time added on in SW6.

QPR manager Ian Holloway said: "Alex made a great save for us. He's a top goalkeeper and his record at saving penalties is fantastic."

Television replays indicated that justice was eventually seen to be done.

Referee's assistant Mark Pottage couldn't even blame the bright Shepherd's Bush sunshine for his decision to raise his flag in front of the shaded stand to alert referee Keith Stroud to what he saw – or what he thought he saw.

Aluko was running at pace just inside the penalty area, hotly pursued by Jake Bidwell, when he hit the deck in the sixth minute. Did the full-back unintentionally clip the winger's heels? If so, there was only the slightest contact. Holloway, never one to sit on the fence in these situations, was in no doubt: "It was never a penalty. How can the referee give them a penalty like that?"

"I've never seen anything quite as embarrassing in my life, to be honest. Am I allowed to say that? Yeah, because I can. I thought it was soft to say the least and maybe some of our lads are too honest. That's never a penalty in my book.

"We're all standing here on the side being judged and hopefully Mr Stroud will be too, because that was an awful performance from a referee."

After Smithies' latest penalty save, Irish youngster Ryan Manning celebrated signing a new contract by netting his first goal as a pro on his fourth appearance when he latched on to Kevin McDonald's error to put Rangers ahead on 25 minutes.

QPR got in the faces of their more cultured opponents and deserve credit for relentless endeavour, denying them time and space to inflict much damage – until Martin redeemed himself with the 75th-minute equaliser.

marked inside the six-yard box, denied QPR a fourth consecutive league victory – a winning sequence they last achieved three years ago – and a first double over Fulham since the 1979-80 season.

It was, though, a game neither side deserved to lose and a fair result. "It was a proper derby, wasn't it? The fighting spirit from both sides was great to see," said Holloway.

"It was a really tough game. Fulham are a really good side. It was difficult for us because we had to do things a bit differently to what we normally do. Our shape was good but we didn't quite get tight enough to them and that's credit to Fulham.

"But we more than matched a good side who have been together a long time. Our spirit was fantastic. That's a big point for us today. Onwards and upwards for us now.

"I'm disappointed we didn't win the game. We needed a second goal really but it wasn't to be.

"It's nice to get a draw rather than get beaten but I wanted all three points.

"We're still a new group with a new manager. We're learning as we go but I can't fault the boys. I'm very, very proud of our lads. They gave it everything and we've kept our old run going.

"Something is growing here. There's a real unity in this group. The fans were magnificent. I hope they like what they're seeing from us. I really think they are.

"That's four games undefeated, with three wins, and we are moving forward. We've got to keep this going now."

Rangers, now 17th in the Championship, hope to get back on the winning trail when they entertain third-bottom Burton Albion in W12 on Saturday. The Brewers have not scored in their last three matches and have lost seven of their last eight. Their only victory in 14 away league matches came last month at Rotherham United.

Gaffer draws no comfort

Focus on Craven Cottage

FULHAM hope to close the gap on teams above them in the race for promotion with victory in their rearranged Championship game at Reading tonight (8pm).

The original fixture, scheduled for the Madejski Stadium on December 30, was abandoned at half-time due to fog, with the match deadlocked at 0-0.

Since then, Fulham have made their play-off ambitions crystal clear. If they win their game in hand, they will jump from ninth to seventh place and find themselves only two points adrift of the top six.

It is a measure of his team's progress this season that a late equaliser in Saturday's West London derby at in-form Queens Park Rangers failed to please Whites' head coach Slavisa Jokanovic.

Chris Martin made up for his earlier penalty miss with a 75th-minute leveller which cancelled out the strike by Ryan Manning that punished a costly, sloppy error by midfielder Kevin McDonald.

Asked if coming from behind meant he was happy with a draw, Jokanovic said: "No, we came here with the intention to win the game.

"At the beginning of the game we made a few important mistakes. We missed a penalty. We tried to find our style and we moved the ball but we made a mistake when they scored the first goal."

Jokanovic pointed out that the Loftus Road pitch was not conducive to his team's natural passing game. He said: "These conditions, with this kind of field, it's not easy for us to move the ball from one side to the other. The pitch was better for them than it was for our style, which is completely legal, but we weren't comfortable enough with the ball.

"The ball was bouncing all the time. If you watched the game, it's very clear. QPR found more benefits playing on this kind of pitch than we did."

Jokanovic says he will continue to back Martin as Whites' penalty-taker despite seeing QPR goalkeeper Alex Smithies deny his main striker from 12 yards with an excellent save in the sixth minute. In truth, the visitors were fortunate to be awarded the chance, after Sone Aluko tumbled despite minimal contact with Jake Bidwell.

"We've had eight penalties and scored only two goals," he bemoaned, "but in the future Chris Martin is going to be the man who will continue to be responsible for this kind of situation.

"We keep going and practising in training. It's football and is part of the game, these things happen – many times in our case. We are going to improve in the future.

"Chris Martin's a killer, a player who can do it well. He still scored a goal. He's a strong man and I am sure he is a guy with enough personality to take the next one and score."

Martin scored from the spot to set up a 2-0 victory over Barnsley in the last game at Craven Cottage. His deft close-range flick to equalise against QPR was his ninth goal in his last 13 league appearances.

On Sunday (12.30pm), Whites take a break from the league to host Hull City in the FA Cup fourth round.

'Perfect' Pedro hits top form

And striker Costa happy to show staying power for Blues

This week at STAMFORD BRIDGE

By Paul Lagan

PEDRO believes that Chelsea have had the perfect weekend and that the next two Premier League games, against Liverpool and Arsenal, could determine the destination of the title.

The 29-year-old Spanish midfielder, a £21 million purchase from Barcelona in 2015, is having the best season of his Chelsea career as Blues edge towards the title – they are eight points clear of second-placed Arsenal.

He said after the regulation 2-0 win over Hull City at Stamford Bridge on Sunday: "It is good and this win was important to us to maintain our confidence. The most important thing is the three points.

"It's been a great weekend for us, lots of rivals have dropped points. There is a higher distance between us and some of our rivals now but we must take it game by game. We must prepare through the week to play against Liverpool and Arsenal. These two games will be very difficult for us."

One man proving himself invaluable to Chelsea is Diego Costa, who netted the opener against Hull in time added on at the end of the first half.

Rumours of unrest and a lucrative move to China have been put to one side while the title race is on, and Pedro is hoping that situation continues.

"Yeah, he is a great striker," said Pedro. "He put in a good performance, he is scoring more goals and helping the team. He is in a good moment for us, the club, the supporters, everybody, and we hope it continues in this way.

"I have played with important players, like (Zlatan) Ibrahimovic. Costa is a very good striker too, a very good runner, physically strong, and scores more goals. He is perfect for this team."

Pedro played down the recent controversy surrounding Costa and Antonio Conte and the training-ground bust-up. He's having none of it.

"No, with the team, he has been training very well, with his team-mates," he said. "He is very happy to be here in the club, this is the most important thing."

Pedro was one of the players who urged Costa to focus on Chelsea for the rest of this season.

"Yeah, his focus is now the team, to fight for this title. It's good that he is showing ambition for the team."

The livewire midfielder has been pivotal to Chelsea's success this season and is happy with his performances.

"This is probably my best season for Chelsea," he said, "but everyone is putting in good performances for the team. We are more compact, very good mentally, in good physical condition and we are training very hard."

But he acknowledges that securing the Premier League is not as easy as winning Spain's Primera Division, which invariably features a two-way battle between Barca and Real Madrid.

"This title is very difficult to win," he said. "The Premier League is probably the best, strongest, most competitive in the world, and for me it would be a dream to win this title.

"Our win against Hull sends a very important message to our rivals. But for us the most important thing is it continues in this way, game by game."

While not exactly dismissing Saturday's FA Cup fourth-round tie against West London neighbours Brentford, Pedro is more focused on the match at Liverpool the following Tuesday.

"All the games are important," he said. "The FA Cup is important but these two games, against Liverpool and Arsenal in the league, are very important to us."

Meanwhile, Conte was happy with the result against Hull – despite the low-key performance.

"Yes, for sure, this wasn't our best game," he said. "But I think it's normal. It can be normal because we are in the second part of the season and the points now are heavy for us but also for the other teams. The points were very heavy for Hull City, because they are in the relegation zone.

"We faced a team in good form and with good organisation. They changed the system to play against us but I'm pleased because, after this weekend, you can see that when I talk and say games like this are very difficult, and there aren't easy games, it's the reality. This weekend told this. A lot of opponents dropped points this weekend.

"It's not easy to play the last game of the weekend and to know the results of the other teams. If the opponents win or lose, you always have pressure. Against Hull, we had the pressure to win and exploit this weekend, and it's not easy."

With an eight-point lead over the chasing pack, it looks like Chelsea's title to lose. But Conte is as pragmatic as ever.

"In my experience, in my career as a footballer, I win a title by seven points four games from the end. I win – and I lost – before four games from the end. Now we have an eight-point lead with 16 games to play. Me and my players need to know this league will be very tough until the end.

"But to win this type of game and exploit the situation (Tottenham, Liverpool and the two Manchester clubs all dropped points) was very important, I'm sure about this. To stay now in that position is fantastic for us because, at the start of the season, no-one backed us."

On Costa, Conte said: "Diego has two years before his contract expires with Chelsea. I think his contract puts to an end all the speculation. I repeat, he's very happy to stay with us and to play with Chelsea.

"For us, now, it's very important to concentrate on the present and not try to see too far into the future."

Asked if Chelsea's attacking talisman would be offered a new contract, the coach said: "I don't know, this decision is something you have to take together with the club. But, I repeat, I don't see any problem with Diego and his contract."

● CHELSEA'S defence of the FA Youth Cup continues to run smoothly. Having dispatched Birmingham City 5-0 last Wednesday, the under-18s were due to host Sheffield Wednesday in the fifth round at Aldershot last night.

At Birmingham, a hat-trick by Mason Mount and strikes from Cole Dasilva and Reece James were more than enough to secure Chelsea's second consecutive 5-0 victory in the competition, having previously swept aside Cardiff City by the same margin, although coach Jody Morris felt that they should have scored more.

"I'm pleased," said Morris. "There were some really good individual performances throughout the team and, collectively, we dominated the game from start to finish. It was similar to our league game last weekend (a 0-0 home draw against Aston Villa), only this time we ended up taking some of our chances.

"That was probably the only side of this game I was a little disappointed with. We could have got double figures if we had taken our chances properly, although you can't really moan too much after a 5-0 win."

Chelsea's under-23 development squad romped to an impressive 4-0 victory at Leicester City. Mukhtar Ali netted a brace, with Dominic Solanke and an own goal making up the score.
